Trenton Forging Company Awards Robert Hopkins Employee of the Month of July

Robert Hopkins has been a die designer at Trenton Forging Company for six years. He enjoys his job because he likes drawing and creating prints on the computer all day. When Trenton Forging receives a request for a quote, Robert's task is to create a print based on a drawing of a part sent by the potential customer.

In an effort to survive these uncertain economic times, Trenton Forging has recently converted their entire quoting system from a paper system to an electronic system, which gives them the ability to quote an extremely high number of jobs in a very short period of time.

Trenton Forging Company's President, David Moxlow, says, "Robert is an extremely important part of the team here. Our average turnaround time for a quote is less than two days, which increases the number of drawings that Robert must convert to models in order to complete the quote process for each part. His ability to work quickly and accurately has been extremely valuable and has been a fundamental reason why we have survived this economy.

Robert's manager, Walt Schultz, says that "Robert has shown consistent ability to take on new challenges and an increased workload."

Robert is married to his wife Rebecca, has two pugs, one Pomeranian, and six chinchillas.

Michigan-based Trenton Forging is a leading producer of custom impression die forgings for a wide variety of industries, including automotive, mining, military, and agriculture.
